I think the best solution of the difficulty is to authorize the Principal of the Central College to get his binding done elsewhere than at the Govt Press. Before, however, sanctioning an addition to his contingent allowance on this account, let us ascertain what has been the average cost of binding College books hitherto. Ask the Supdt, Govt Press to furnish this information for the last three official years, & for the current year up to date (this will enable us to see whether the Resolution of Govt can be carried out) 25/4/05

Sir,

I have the honour to enquire whether it is the order of the Government that the Superintendent of the Government Press should object to do the binding work of the College Library as it has done without any objection since ever I came to the Central College. He has declined recently to bind books sent by me on the ground that the "Style of binding is elaborate and the cost enormous". On my informing him that "these epithets might be applicable if the books were bound in morocco and gilt-edged" but not when they are bound merely in half calf and calico - the usual style in any public Library in England and the only style suitable for a College Library - where books are lent to students and teachers but that I was willing that the binding in certain cases should be in cloth, or coloured Cowdry leather, gilt lettered on the back. He offers in reply to bind apparently all our books in "half calico with printed labels on the back". This I consider not only unworthy of a Govt. Institution, but also too mean and flimsy for such a Library as that of the Central College. Such a binding would last no time, and would be a perpetual source of trouble.

Consider the Government Press binding very commonplace indeed, and I shall have no difficulty in getting the work done better and more expeditiously elsewhere.

I cannot admit that the Superintendent of the Press is better able than I am to judge of the style of binding suitable for a College Library; and I may say that such a style of binding as that which he now offers is not to be found in any College Library that I have ever seen. I have always been most careful to avoid asking anything extravagant in the matter of binding for our Library books and I have often asked that books should be merely repaired when I might very fairly have asked that they should be rebound.

I have the honour therefore to request that Govt. may be pleased either to order the Supt. of the Govt. Press to bind our College books as has been the custom hitherto in such style as I may request or else to increase the annual Contingent allowance of the College from Rs 400/- to Rs 600/- so that I may be able to get the Library binding and repairs done elsewhere than at the Govt. Press. I may add that I
